Golder, proofs in .925 silver, copper and aluminium bronze, (Krause "Unusual World Coins" X11, 11a, 11b, CV US$165); Edward VII, unofficial pattern double florin or four shillings, dated 1901, 'colonial' crowned and robed bust right, by Donald R. Golder, proofs in .925 silver, copper and aluminium bronze, (Krause "Unusual World Coins" X13, 13a, 13b, CV US$165) (total CV $330). FDC. (2 sets, 6 coins)

$150

Mintage 360 only for each type of Queen Victoria and 425 for each type of Edward VII. These Ireland pattern double florins were inspired by those of Reginald Huth, who instructed John Pinches to produce a small number of patterns to commemorate Queen Victoria's visit to Ireland in 1900. Huth/Pinches produced a version of Brock's 'old head' portrait of the Queen for the medallion coin's obverse and adopted a cruciform shield design reminiscent of the 1887 double florin for the reverse. The reverse of this 1901 dated pattern combines a crowned Irish harp design, found on the Irish coinage of George III and George IV, with a very detailed quatrefoil design featured on the British pattern florins of 1848.

Sir Ronald Aylmer Fisher was born at East Finchely, London on 17 February 1890 to fine art auctioneers, George and Katie (née Heath) Fisher. His eyesight was already poor as a child so when he won a mathematics scholarship to Harrow at the age of 14, he needed extra tutoring, this being given by G.H.P. Mayo. He then won another scholarship in mathematics to Cambridge University in 1909, graduating in 1912 with a B.A. in astronomy and quantum physics under J. Jeans.

In 1911, at Fisher's urging, the Cambridge University Eugenics Society was established and he served on its Council and also spoke there on the theories of the day. In 1912 he published his first paper presenting what would later become known as the 'method of maximum likelihood'. During his time at the university he worked and did study on various statistical theories until he took a statistical job with the Mercantile and General Investment Company in London while also training with the Territorial Army in 1913. He was rejected for war service because of his bad eyesight so he taught high school mathematics and physics. Around this time, his theoretical studies drew the attention of an eminent statistician at the time, Karl Pearson. Pearson refuted Fisher's theories and this actually brought Fisher's name into the limelight and over the ensuing years ongoing disagreement and sometimes violent confrontations occurred between the two protagonists.

Fisher was actually correct in his findings but because of Pearson's fame, the Royal Society withdrew Fisher's papers on his theories from its consideration. In 1919 Pearson in fact offered Fisher a job, no doubt because he recognized his great ability, however Fisher declined and instead took a position as statistician at Rothamsted Experimental Station which was involved in agricultural research and this resulted in his famous paper, 'Statistical Methods for Research Workers'. Following this, in 1920, Fisher was greatly interested in the problem of natural selection and population genetics writing another famous work, 'Genetical Theory of Natural Selection'. Two other important papers were to follow, one in 1922 on maximum likelihood and one in 1925 relating to small observational samples collected from scientific experiments.

In 1929 Fisher was elected as a Fellow of the Royal Society as a mathematician. He continued his research while teaching in the summer at Iowa State University in 1931 and 1936 and in between in 1933 he accepted the position as Galton Professor of Eugenics at Cambridge University. In 1935 with the establishment of the Rockefeller Foundation for human serological research Fisher evaluated the Rh blood groups and in the process predicted two new antibodies. During WWII his research department was forced to move and with no funding he accepted an election to the Balfour Chair of Genetics at Cambridge in 1943. Lack of research funding continued after the war and although he continued to support statistics and the practical uses for same in experimentation, he also began to pursue his own varied interests. He travelled a bit and after he retired in 1957 he joined in research with E.A. Cornish in Adelaide, South Australia in 1959 where he died on 29 July 1962.

Some of Sir Ronald Aylmer Fisher's numerous honours, memberships and awards include three medals of the Royal Statistical Society, the Darwin Medal (1948) and the Copley Medal (1956), honorary degrees from numerous universities, membership of over twenty academies, societies and institutes and a British knighthood in 1952.

Fisher's ashes lie in St. Peter's Cathedral on the corner of King William Road and Pennington Terrace, North Adelaide where there is a memorial pew inscribed, 'In memory of Sir Ronald Fisher FRS 1890-1962' and on the floor beside it is a brass plate inscribed, 'Ronald Aylmer Fisher Kt. ScD FRS 1890-1962'.
